

Today I flew home to Indiana to cast my vote in the May Primary election in person at the Clifford Fire Station in Columbus. Lots of friends told me I should just vote by absentee ballot but, for me, that would be like phoning in Christmas. I so enjoy standing outside my home precinct and chatting with my neighbors. I found out that the field behind my house is getting soybeans this year and I got an early sense that a close friend would score a big win in the governors race. I hope I can always be home on election day. There's nothin like the view you get from the Clifford Fire Station!
